There was no physical defect in either plaintiff or defendant, nor any unwillingness in the plaintiff to consummate the marriage; but the defendant had always entertained such hatred and disgust for the plaintiff as to result, in the opinion of the medical experts, in an incurable impotency in the defendant as regards the plaintiff. The delegates unanimously found, on the evidence, that the consummation of this marriage had from its commencement been impossible; because the defendant was, from a physical cause, namely, impotency as regards the plaintiff, unable to effect consummation. They also found that there was no collusion or connivance between the parties. Held, on this finding, that such impotency quoad the plaintiff must be regarded as one of the causes going to make consummation of a marriage impossible under s 28 of Act XV of 1865, there being nothing in the Act to suggest a contrary opinion. ——— Remuneration for professional attendance. The amount of remuneration for the professional attendance of a medical officer on the family of a public servant in the absence of an express agreement should be determined with reference to the circumstances in each case, and the principle adopted by the Judge in estimating the amount, that reference must be had not only to present means, but to prospects, without considering other matters, was not correct. Held, under the circumstances of the case, that one-fifth of the monthly income of the defendant was the fair amount to which the plaintiff was entitled for his professional attendance for the year. 18. ———————— Guardian—Guardian of property—Guardian of person—Necessity for issue of certificate of administration in order to complete appointment of guardian of property. The Bombay Minors Act (XX of 1864) does not in terms provide for the appointment of a guardian of the property of a minor, but only for the grant of a certificate of administration, so that, until the certificate is issued, there is no such appointment of the guardian of the property as will extend the age of the minority from sixteen to twenty-one. But it is different as regards the appointment of a guardian of the person. The Act provides, in terms, for such an appointment being made, and no certificate of appointment is contemplated by the Act, on the language of which it is plain that the appointment of a guardian of the person is complete on the order of the Court being made appointing him. The plaintiff's mother, G, died in 1861 possessed of property which she had inherited from her husband. The plaintiff, who was born in 1855, was then a minor of the age of eight years. In 1867 the plaintiff's maternal grandfather obtained a certificate of administration. On his death, an order of Court was made on the 21st March 1873 appointing the Nazir of the Court administrator of the property and the plaintiff's mother-in-law the guardian of the person of the plaintiff, but no fresh certificate of administration was granted. In 1891 the plaintiff brought the present suit against the defendants to recover from them the property left by her mother. The defendants contended, inter alia, that the plaintiff had attained her majority in 1874, when she arrived at the age of sixteen, and that the suit was therefore barred by limitation. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contended that the Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) was applicable, and that, under its provisions, she did not attain majority until she was twenty-one, i.e., until the year 1876, and that the present suit was therefore in time. Held, that the suit was not barred by limitation. The Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875) was applicable (except so far as its operation was excluded by s. 2), inasmuch as there was a guardian of the person of the plaintiff in existence both when the Act came into force and also when she arrived at the age of sixteen and eighteen, and therefore the period of minority of the plaintiff was extended to twenty-one years of age. Case law, English and Indian, on the subject, considered. Where the relation is created by contract with several joint landlords, according to the English cases, such relation subsists only so long as all of them wish it to continue, while according to the Indian cases it subsists until all of them agree to put an end to it; and such a contract cannot, in the absence of special circumstances, be put an end to by any one of them, if they continue to hold as joint tenants. This principle, however, will not apply when the suit is for ejectment and partition and all the co-owners are made parties. The principle embodied in ss. 37 and 109 of the Transfer of Proto payment of rent and surrender of possession, must, if such obligations be severable, and the lessee will not be prejudiced by such severance, be performed by the lessee between the lessor and such other, in such proportions as may be settled by all the parties concerned, including the lessee. 1. ———— Money paid under compulsion of law—Payment into Court by mortgagee of amount of decree to prevent sale of mortgaged property—Voluntary payment The defendant sued one J H P in the Small Cause Court and obtained a decree, in execution of which he caused a steamer to be attached as being the property of J H P Thereupon the plaintiffs, alleging themselves to be in possession of the steamer as mortgagees from J H P, in order to obtain its release, paid the amount of the decree against J H P into Court, and the steamer was given up Subsequently an order was made by the Court, on the application of the plaintiffs, that the money should remain in Court pending the result of a suit to be brought by them for its recovery. They accordingly brought a suit against the defendant The Judge of the Small Cause Court found that J H P had no attachable interest in the steamer, and that the plaintiffs had paid the amount of the decree on compulsion Held, that the plaintiffs could maintain the suit, although the defendant had not actually received the amount of the decree MORAN v DEWAN ALI SIRANG . 8 B. The other was an agreement by which the defendants covenanted, upon payment of a certain sum by a specified date, to reconvey the property sold by the first-mentioned deed. Held, that evidence was admissible dehors the documents to show that the intention of the parties was not to effect an out-and-out sale with merely a right of re-purchase under certain conditions left in the vendor, but to constitute a mortgage by conditional sale or bai-bil-wafa. The plaintiff in a suit for pre-emption had, prior to the sale of the property claimed, executed a deed in respect of his share in the village in virtue of which he claimed the right to pre-empt, the material portion of which deed was as follows: "Thirdly, if I, the vendor, or the heirs of me, the vendor, Ali Jan, alias Ali Ahmed, should pay off the entire consideration money mentioned above on the [illegible] of Jeth Sudi, 1291 Fasli, to the said purchaser, he should without any objection or hesitation return the money, and, returning the property described above in the document to me, the vendor, revoke the sale." Held, that this deed was a bai-bil-wafa or mortgage by conditional sale, and that, as the conditional sale had not become absolute at the time when the right of pre-emption accrued, the conditional vendor or mortgagor had still a subsisting right of pre-emption. Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din, I. and interest. The bond further provided that in case the rent derivable from the house should fall short of the amounts payable every month, the mortgagors would themselves pay them on the due dates, and that, in default, they would pay compound interest. In case the amounts payable should not be paid for five months, the mortgagees were to recover the debt from the mortgagors. On the same day the mortgagors by a separate agreement, rented the house from the mortgagees at a rental of R30-10-0 per mensem, payable by the 25th of each month with compound interest on the amount of rent; in default, at the same rate as that payable under the mortgage bond in case of interest being in default The lessees also agreed to vacate and deliver up the house to the lessors, or to those who obtained an order from the lessors, within thirty days of being required so to do. Default having been made, the mortgagees sued for the amount due, and, in default, for sale of the mortgaged property Held, that the two instruments were executed as parts of one and the same transaction, and that the intention was that the rights and obligations of the parties were to be gathered from the provisions of both. Taking the two together, it was clear that the transaction was one entirely of mortgage with an express covenant to pay the principal and interest in instalments, and conferring a power on the mortgagee to take possession of the property mortgaged and apply the usufruct in the discharge of the interest and principal. Juggeewundas v. *Ramdas, 2 Moo I. The sawai which equalled one-fourth of R5,000, was to take the place of interest. The sum of R5,000 was made up as follows: R4,812-8 were paid to the mortgagor in cash, R87-8 were retained by the mortgagee on account of the first instalment and R100 were retained on account of khichadi (bonus). The mortgagee having brought a suit to recover the mortgage-debt, namely, R7,995, and a question having arisen whether the mortgage was so unconscionable as to be unenforceable in its integrity: Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the mortgage was enforceable in its integrity. Per Curiam.—The principles of justice, equity and good conscience do not of necessity disentitle a mortgagee from insisting on his security for a greater sum than what has been actually advanced: in each case the question must be asked whether there has or has not been a hard and unfair bargain on the borrower, but when that is not established against the mortgagee, then the right to redeem still remains, though it is redeeming not on payment of the sum advanced, but of the sum, which the parties agreed it was worth the mortgagor's while to pay in order to get a smaller advance, when he was in want of money. Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act applies to a mortgage decree. When a mortgage decree is obtained against the original mortgagor and a subsequent mortgagee, but the decree does not in any way apportion the mortgage-debt, it cannot be said that the decree comes within the scope of the first part of the second paragraph of Expl. I to Art. 179, merely because the subsequent mortgagee would be affected by it only to the extent of properties covered by his mortgage. An application for postponement of a sale was made because the decree-holders by reason of a change of their manager were not acquainted with all the facts and because several of the properties had been advertised for sale at the instance of a prior mortgagee and also because no intending purchasers were present. Held, that the application could not be considered as a step in aid of execution. A Commissioner appointed to make up the accounts reported that R33,087-9-8¼ were due to the mortgagee at the date of the suit. The Court in giving judgment held that there was no necessity for passing an order as to the amount due under the mortgage beyond saying that the account was correct and then proceeded to give the mortgagee a decree for possession. The amount alleged to be due by the mortgagee and found due by the Commissioner was arrived at by calculating compound interest on unpaid instalments of interest. It was contended by the mortgagee in a subsequent suit brought against him by the mortgagor for redemption of the mortgaged property that the decree in the previous suit must be accepted as settling the amount due to the mortgagee at the date of that suit Held, by their Lordships, who adopted the conclusion of the lower Appellate Court, that nothing had ... estoppel

On the 9th November 1881 defendant obtained a decree on his two bonds of the 27th January 1874 and 10th August 1878, and on his application for execution of the decree the property mortgaged to him was advertised for sale on the 20th November 1883 Meanwhile the plaintiff had taken the necessary proceedings to foreclose his conditional sale, and upon the 29th March 1883 the sale was foreclosed On the 19th November 1883 plaintiff instituted ... vested in the Receiver under s. 361, he under s 356 was directed to convert it into money. G therefore at the sale only purchased the equity of redemption in the one field; and the defendant, who now stood in G's shoes with notice of the plaintiff's claim, although he might possibly be entitled to redeem the whole nine fields comprised in the mortgage, was bound to deliver possession to the plaintiff (the mortgagee) until that was done The mortgaged property could not be sold by the Receiver without the consent of the plaintiff (the mortgagee) or paying him off. S. 356 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) no doubt contemplates the payment of debts secured by mortgage out of the proceeds of the conversion of the insolvent's property in priority to the general creditors, but this must be taken in connection with s 354, and must be understood as referring to those cases in which the mortgaged premises have been sold after coming to an understanding with the mortgagee. liable for its proportionate share of the mortgage-debt. At the date of suit the mortgage-debt had increased to R4,000, and he claimed to recover R800 from the house. The purchaser of the house (defendant 1) pleaded that at the time of the sale the value of the fields purchased by the mortgagee was more than sufficient to satisfy the mortgage-debt, which was therefore wholly extinguished, and that the house was no longer liable. Held (Fulton, J., dissenting), that the house was liable in the hands of the first defendant to a proportionate share of the mortgage-debt, he having purchased it, subject thereto, and that the plaintiff (the mortgagee) was entitled to recover such share from him. Held, by Fulton J., that where a mortgagee, instead of enforcing his mortgage and bringing the property to sale free of incumbrances (where such course is open, as it was in the present case), brings to sale the equity of redemption in part of the mortgaged property, and buys it himself, an equity arises which entitles the mortgagor to require satisfaction first out of the property brought by the mortgagee. Otherwise the action of the mortgagee in causing the sale subject to the mortgage might almost necessarily secure to him an undue profit at the expense of the mortgagor. Fakiraya v. Gadigaya (1901)

Whether a mortgage, paid off, has been kept alive or extinguished, depends upon the intention of the parties, the mere fact that it has been paid off not deciding the question whether or not it has been extinguished. Express declaration of intention will cause either the one result or the other and in the absence of such expression the intention may be inferred, either one way or the other. A lender of money upon a mortgage, which, however, having been made by a person not having authority to charge the greater part of the property included in it, was to that extent invalid, relied upon a charge effected in a prior paid-off mortgage to another mortgagee of the same property. The balance due for the prior mortgage debt had been paid out of the money advanced on the later, and the prior instrument had come into the possession of the present mortgagee. Held, that it must be presumed, in the absence of any expression of inten-

without possession to the defendant; on the 10th of June 1873 a second mortgage, purporting to give possession, was executed to H; on the 12th of June 1873 a second mortgage, also purporting to give possession, was passed to the defendant; on the 15th of November 1877 H obtained a decree against the mortgagors upon his mortgage of 10th June 1873, and sold the lands which were purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff sought to obtain possession, but was obstructed by the defendant. He thereupon brought this suit. The defendant contended that he had not been a party to the suit by H, and was entitled to possession, and offered to pay to the plaintiff the amount of his purchase-money, or to vacate the lands on satisfaction of his own mortgage-lien. Held, that the question whether H's mortgage of the 15th July 1870 was to be regarded as merged in his second mortgage of 10th June 1873 so as to deprive him of priority of title over the defendant, depended on the intention of the parties to the said mortgage, and there was nothing in the second mortgage-deed to show an intention to forego the benefit of the security created by the prior mortgage-deed of 15th July 1870 which was neither given up to the mortgagor nor cancelled at the time, but remained with H until handed over to the plaintiff with the other title-deeds. Under these circumstances, the decree passed on the 15th November 1877 conferred an absolute title on the plaintiff, who purchased at the auction sale free from all incumbrances created by the mortgagor subsequent to the mortgage of 15th July 1870. The defendant, however, not having been made a party to H's suit to enforce his security did not lose his right of redemption, which still remained to him. The plaintiff therefore purchased the property subject to the defendant's right of redemption. The High Court passed a decree due on the mortgage of the 15th July 1870, if the same had remained unaffected by the mortgage of 10th June 1873, or in default, should remain for ever foreclosed. DULLABHDAS DEVCHAND v. LAKSHMANDAS SARUPCHAND . I. L. R. 10 Bom. 88

the 7th July 1870 the plaintiff, as purchaser at the abovementioned sale, was put into possession, but on the 24th August 1870 the defendant obtained a decree in ejectment against N (the mother of A) as her tenant. In execution of that decree, the defendant recovered possession of the land, dispossessing the plaintiff though he had not been a party to the ejectment suit The plaintiff thereupon brought the present suit to recover the land under s. 230 of Act VIII of 1859 His claim was rejected by the Subordinate Judge, but allowed by the joint Judge in appeal On special appeal to the High Court —Held, that the claim of S against the land was prior to that of the defendant, inas-

the defendant to the extent of her (defendant's) mortgage, and she (defendant) would have been entitled to redeem the land by payment of the amount which might have been found due to S in her suit. The defendant being in possession of the land at the time of the institution of the suit of S, and her (defendant's) mortgage being registered, S must be regarded as having had notice of the defendant's claim, and was bound to make defendant a party to that suit in order to give a good title to a purchaser under such decree as might be made in that suit. S, by her omission to do so, did not

In 1875 the plaintiff brought a suit against B alone upon the mortgage, obtained a decree, and he himself purchased the property at the Court-sale held in execution of that decree. In attempting to take possession he was obstructed by the defendant, who was in possession of the property as mortgagee. The plaintiff now sued the defendant for possession. Both the lower Courts held that the plaintiff should satisfy the defendant's subsequent mortgage before he could recover possession. On an appeal by the plaintiff to the High Court:—Held, reversing the lower Court's decree, that the plaintiff's claim should be allowed. The plaintiff having brought to sale, in execution of his decree, the estate as it stood at the date of his mortgage free from all subsequent incumbrances, the fact that he himself was the purchaser could not affect the estate which passed by that sale. As the defendant had not been a party to the plaintiff's suit against B, he was entitled to redeem the property if he wished. MOHAN MANOR v. TOGU UKA

In October 1869 the mortgagors sold the property, and thereupon one B brought a suit to enforce the right of pre-emption in respect of the sale and obtained a decree, and got the property and sold it in 1871 to D. In 1883 the mortgagee brought a suit against D to obtain possession under his mortgage. Held that, although it would be material to show that the defendant had in any way by fraud been kept out of knowledge of the mortgage, his not having notice of it would not otherwise affect his liability inasmuch as the prin-

The property mortgaged was attached as the property of the judgment-debtor, and an order for sale was passed. Prior to the sale, however, the mortgagees having put their mortgage into suit, the judgment-debtor confessed judgment, admitted the mortgage-debt, stated that he had not means to pay it, and asked that a decree for possession of the property might be passed in favour of the mortgagees; and a decree was so passed. To this suit the mortgagees, who were found to have had notice of the interest of the attaching judgment-creditor, never made him a party. Subsequently to the passing of the decree in the mortgagees' suit, the judgment-creditor under the money decree caused the property to be sold. The auction-purchaser was resisted in obtaining possession, by the mortgagees, and thereupon sued them for possession. Held, that the auction-purchaser was entitled to a decree for possession on redeeming the mortgage. *Surut Dassi Koer v. owner of the equity of redemption, who was omitted from the mortgage suit, is not affected by the decree. It was to be redeemed in eight years, or else to become the absolute property of the mortgagee. It was not redeemed; and in 1859 B, in whose name the land was entered in the Government records, executed a razinama in favour of V, and V passed a kabulat accepting the land. B and R then became V's tenants, and were, as such, successfully sued by him for rent in 1863. In 1872 V sold the land to N, who again sold it to the defendant. The plaintiff, as purchaser from the original mortgagors (B and R) of their alleged equity of redemption, filed the present suit to redeem the property. Held, that, as the razinama given by V contained no reservation, and as it was accompanied by a transfer of possession, it had the effect of a conveyance of all the mortgagor's rights to the mortgagee. It operated to extinguish the equity of redemption, notwithstanding any misconception or ignorance on V's part of his rights as mortgagor. Under the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872, s. 21), error of law does not vitiate a contract; much less will it annul a conveyance after the lapse of many years unless there has been some fraud or

Subsequently defendant No 2 personally made a further loan to N, who executed two san-mortgage-deeds to him of the same property containing stipulations that these bonds should be paid before the mortgage of July 1877. N died, and his widow and heirs assigned the equity of redemption of the mortgage of July 1877 to the plaintiff, who sued the defendants to redeem. The defendants contended that the plaintiff was bound to pay off the two later bonds as well as the original mortgage-debt. Held, that the later loan by defendant No. 2 being a personal loan by him, the firm, as such, had no equity to insist on its being paid before the mortgage was redeemed, whatever right defendant No. 2 in his personal capacity might have. But in this suit, which was one to redeem the mortgage, he was a party as member of the firm, and not in his individual capacity, and he could not therefore resist the plaintiff's right to redeem on any ground based of the promise of the two bonds executed to himself. s. 99—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), s. 294. S, his son S D and his grandson the plaintiff D (son of a predeceased son) were undivided. In 1875 S mortgaged the property in dispute to H with possession. After S's death in 1877, S D managed the whole estate. In 1878, during D's absence from his native village, H sued S D as the heir and representative of S in respect of other debts and, obtaining a money-decree against him, attached the mortgaged property in execution of the decree. After the attachment, H, without notifying or disclosing his mortgage lien, caused several of the properties to be sold and, without obtaining

Courts found that the money-decree which H obtained and the execution-proceedings thereon bound the estate. It was contended that the execution-sale had not been objected to under s. 294 of the Civil Procedure Code and were therefore valid, and that the plaintiff consequently could not redeem. Held, that the plaintiff might redeem, although he had not taken proceedings under s. 294. The fact that the mortgagee H had sold the property in execution of a money-decree did not free him from the liability to be redeemed as mortgagee. The sale was rendered nugatory, not by the provisions of s. 294 (though permission to bid granted under that section might have validated the purchase), but by the impossibility of a mortgagee by such sales and purchases freeing himself from the liability to be redeemed. 69 In a suit by a mortgagor for redemption of a mortgage dated 17th March, 1891, a decree was passed in 1897, allowing him to redeem on payment of the mortgage-debt within a year from the date of the decree, but the decree did not contain any provision for foreclosure or sale in default of payment on the due date The plaintiff having made default, the defendant applied to the Court for an order absolute for foreclosure or sale under s 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882) His application was rejected on the ground that, as the decree did not contain any clause for foreclosure or sale, s. 93 of the Act was not applicable Held, in second appeal, that the defendant (mortgagee) was entitled to the remedy given by s 93, although the decree was not drawn up as prescribed by s 92 The omission of the Court to draw up the proper decree under s. 92 did not deprive the mortgagee of the relief provided by s 93 MURLIDHAR v. Continued possession of the mortgagee is not per se sufficient to keep alive the title of the mortgagor, but his title to redeem, and consequently to the ownership of the mortgaged property, is capable, notwithstanding such possession, of being extinguished by adverse possession for the required period Held, upon the facts of the case, that the equity of redemption claimed by the plaintiff was extinguished by adverse possession, inasmuch as a stranger received rent from the mortgagee in possession, and the stranger's possession was on his own behalf and as owner, and was quite inconsistent with the plaintiff's title LALLA KANHOO LAL v MANKI BIBI (1902) . . . 6 C. The instrument of mortgage contained a covenant conferring upon the mortgagee a right of pre-emption in the following terms:—" If we assign our right over these properties to anyone, the land delivered possession of to you for appropriating the interest shall be assigned to you alone, and it shall not be assigned to anybody else. When we assign the land, we shall receive 50 fanams more from you, and then we shall assign the land for these two amounts together." In 1873, A sold his equity of redemption to V, and before 1893 V's interest was sold in execution of a decree against him, and bought by plaintiff. In 1897, plaintiff instituted this suit for redemption against the representative of S, the mortgagee, who pleaded in defence the right of pre-emption created in his favour by the mortgage deed, and contended that in consequence thereof the assignment to V and the subsequent purchase of V's interest by plaintiff were invalid. The defendant did not, however, bring the price fixed into Court. Held, that plaintiff was entitled to redeem. Per SHEPHERD, J.—Under the covenant, and by reason of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act defendant had no interest in the property. His right could be no other than a right to specific performance available, under s. 27 of the Specific Relief Act, against a transferee who had taken with notice of the covenant. But notice of a contract, such as is required to satisfy the section, must be notice of an existing obligation. Plaintiff was not a transferee who took with notice of the contract now sought to be enforced the time for the performance of which had long passed without anything being done, and the natural inference being that the right arising under it had been waived or otherwise discharged. Assuming that there was notice of the contract, and that it was otherwise a valid contract, defendant could not be allowed to use it as an answer to plaintiff's suit, inasmuch as no suit could now be brought to enforce the contract. Per BHASHYAM AYYANGAR, J.—The rule that a mortgagee may stipulate for the collateral advantage of pre-emption, if such advantage does not directly or indirectly " clog the equity of redemption," is based upon the principle [illegible] But, by the terms of the stipulation under consideration, the mortgagee was entitled to exercise his option by paying, not the market price of the day or the price offered by a stranger, but the price [illegible] In consider- [illegible] to a price by the instrument of [illegible] ever the occasion for exercising the right of pre-emption may arise, is oppressive and unconscionable. Where a right of pre-emption springs from contract, it rests only upon a covenant which does not run with the land, and stands no higher than a contract of sale of immoveable property, and does not of itself create an interest in, or charge on, the immoveable property which is subject to the right of pre-emption. Until the contract is carried out by specific performance, either by act of parties or decree of Court, the pre-emptor acquires no title to or interest in such property, which alone can extinguish the mortgagor's right of redemption, though he may have a right to call for a conveyance of the property. The equity of redemption in an usufructuary mortgage is an " intangible thing " within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and its transfer by sale can be made only by registered instrument, even though its value may be less than R100. The equity of redemption in a simple mortgage may be transferred [illegible] moveable property, and its sale can be effected, if its value be less than R100, without a registered instrument, by mere delivery of the property. The right of a simple mortgagee in the property mortgaged is an intangible thing within the meaning of s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, and a transfer [illegible] by sale of hypothecation executed to secure a debt

When the parties concerned, though in different relation, in a particular litigation are all before the Court, and their cases have been stated, the Court, if it finds the several causes as between plaintiff and the several defendants cannot properly or conveniently be tried together, should deal with them separately as sub-suits under the title and number of the principal suit from which they spring. Munsif's Court to recover several parcels of land from the defendant, plaintiff alleged that defendant held a valid mortgage of R206 on two parcels which he offered to redeem. As to the other parcels, he alleged that, if any charges had been created in defendant's favour over them by his predecessor in title, such charges were invalid. The suit, as valued by the plaintiff, was within the pecuniary limit of the Munsif's jurisdiction Defendant pleaded that he held a mortgage for R3,000 over the land, and therefore the Munsif's Court had no jurisdiction to try the suit. The Munsif tried the question of the validity of the defendant's mortgage, and decreed possession to plaintiff on payment of R906 due on account of mortgages and R1,647-11-9 on account of improvements. On appeal, the District Judge held that the Munsif had no jurisdiction, reversed the decree, and ordered the plaint to be returned to be presented in the proper Court. Held, that the Munsif's Court had jurisdiction. He was convicted of murder, and sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge. The sentence being referred to the High Court for confirmation, it was held that the prisoner had been legally convicted of murder, that he had intentionally done to the deceased more harm than was necessary for any purpose of defence, and that not whilst deprived of power of self-control. But the sentence was mitigated to transportation for life, than which, it was held, no less sentence could be legally passed. The Judge, however, in a letter to Government, suggested the mitigation of the punishment, which was accordingly reduced to imprisonment for six months. REG. v. DURWAN GEER. 1 Ind. Jur. N. The piecemeal examination of the testimony of individual witnesses without a broad view of the facts, circumstances and probabilities of a case generally leads to a failure of justice, especially in a case where most of the witnesses are drawn from a class of persons whose testimony is frequently unconvincing and not unfrequently unreliable. Even if witnesses in a case do not break down in cross-examination or contradict each other, yet if

1. ——— Power of majority to alter rules—Payment of pensions in England—Adjustment of payments in accordance with rate of exchange—Interest of subscriber to Society. The U. S. F. P. Fund, a Society established, as stated in rule 2 of the Rules of the Society, "to provide for the maintenance of the widows and children of those who shall subscribe to it upon the terms and conditions specified below, or upon such others as may be determined upon by the subscribers or by a majority of them," had, prior to 1850, passed a rule (33) that "widows, being incumbents on the Fund, shall be paid their pensions at any place they may desire, subject to the usual charges of remittance; the pensions of children, being incumbents on the Fund, shall also be so paid and on the same condition." The subscriptions were then, and continued to be, paid in rupees, and the pensions were calculated in rupees according to certain tables. On being admitted, a subscriber had to "promise and engage to submit to, and abide by the rules and bye laws of the Institution" (rule 22), and by rule 37 had to "pay a fee equal to ten per cent on the amount of monthly pension insured" Rule 60 gave power to alter any existing [illegible]

Exchange continuing to decline, on the 22nd May 1880, the Society, by the votes of 553 against 505 of the subscribers, passed the following rule "Annuities already due, or becoming due before the 1st May 1880, on risks accepted before the 1st July 1876, shall be payable to incumbents [illegible]

member of the Society, who was admitted as a subscriber for the benefit of his widow in November 1871, for the benefit of his son in September 1873, and for the benefit of his daughter in November 1874 He commenced to pay an increased subscription for the benefit of his son in September 1878. He was not one of the majority who voted in favour of the rule of the 22nd May 1880, though he attended the meeting of subscribers. He died on the 25th June 1880, having up to that time duly paid his subscription to the Fund. In a suit in which the plaintiffs, who were residing in England, claimed to be paid their pensions at the rate of two shillings in the rupee:—Held, that F had no vested interest at the time of the passing of the rule of the 22nd May 1880; that the plaintiffs were, with respect to their pensions, bound by the terms of that rule which a majority of the subscribers had full powers [illegible]

3. ———— Rules of Benefit Society—Power to alter rules The Bombay Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund was a voluntary society established in 1850 Its object was to provide pensions for the widows of its members. One of its rules provided that the rules of the society were subject to such additions and alterations as might from time to time be sanctioned by the general body of subscribers, and by the form of application for admission as a member each applicant promised and engaged to abide by the rules of the society. The plaintiff became a member in 1875. At that time one of the rules (which had been passed in 1871) provided that the pensions of widows resident in Europe should be payable to them at the rate of 2*s.* per rupee. On the 20th July 1895 the society passed a new rule which provided that all pensions due or becoming due after the 31st July 1895 should be paid to incumberts residing in Europe or the colonies at the market rate of exchange on the day of remittance. The plaintiff contended that the society was not competent to alter the rule passed in 1871 by which he had been induced to join the society, and he prayed for a declaration that his wife, if and when she became a widow, would be entitled to have her pension paid at par. Held, dismissing the suit, that the society was competent to alter its rules and that the plaintiff was bound by such altered rules The contract with the plaintiff was that his widow, if he left one, should receive such pension as the rules prescribed, and that the rules were liable to alteration by a majority at a general
